Profitable Reading For Economical People.

Our 9-cent sale closes Saturday night.

Trade with us for a year and your bank account will be bigger.

Nine Hundred and ninety-nine people out of every thousand pay more than they should for the necessities and luxuries of life because they trade with merchants who have either too little capital or too little understanding of business methods—20th century up-to-date business methods—to give their customers the full value for their money. That's a pretty broad and strong assertion—but it's true. Here's the proof:

There are remarkably few wholesalers or manufacturers who won't discount at least 2 and often as high as 5 or 10 per cent for spot cash. What does the low discount—2 per cent—mean? It means that the merchant who does not pay spot cash and get the discount pays 2 per cent a month or 24 per cent a year on the larger portion of his stock. The merchant pays it, but he gets it back when he sells to the consumer, for he bases his price on the cost to him, which includes an interest of 24 per cent a year.

Our customers get the benefit. We saved our customers over a thousand dollars in cash discounts last year. Did you get your share of that thousand? Or, are you paying 24 per cent a year interest? Compare our prices with those of other houses and figure out the result.

We sell almost everything you need except groceries. We are offering a very good carpet and straw matting today for 2 cents a yard.

Judge Lewis Removed.

Judge Vancey Lewis of this city has been elected and accepted the position of instructor in professor in the College of Law at Nashville, Tenn.

Attainments as a lawyer and a further opens to him a new field of duty and of opportunity which will fill with both honor and profit to himself. The position of law lecturer in a college of recognized standing and sufficient financial endowment is one which appeals very strongly to a lawyer of scholarly habits and character, and it is, therefore, not surprising that Judge Lewis should have, after careful consideration concluded to give up his work here and take up his new work. This will not, however, necessitate his departure from South McAlester until the next vacation of the law school. Consulting alone their own selfish desire, would have been at least tempted to advise him to decline any offer which would "take him away from South McAlester and the Indian Territory," but it was the test of their loyalty and they would not urge the declination of the position tendered him.
